SOME PRACTICAL HINTS THAT ARE OF TIMELY VALUE.

The Club for Waist Lining and the Way It Should Be Cut—The Importance of Having, Ironing and Reheating—How to Get a Perfect Fit.

NUMBER 1.

In presenting to our readers this series of articles on first class dressmaking it is our aim to show you the latest modulations of this industry as we believe we are doing them a lasting favor and one which will assist them in becoming accomplished dressmakers, so that, no matter how remote from the seat of fashion, no lady need wear garments that bear the unmistakable mark of "country" about them, and they may, if occasion requires, earn a respectable livelihood at home. These directions and diagrams are substantially the same as those employed by the great man dressmaker of Paris, and the fundamental principles are exactly the same. This lady who made this series of six articles is anxious to put them out and put them in a book for reference and she will have something which would cost her twenty dollars to buy—the price of the "system." No mechanical "system," however, can approach this in simplicity and practicality, and will go called systems fail if the waists are not tried on and managed after this plan, as no two women are formed alike nor is any one woman precisely alike on both sides.

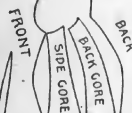

DIAGRAM OF MODEL BACK.

In the first place it requires great care and a half of strong elastic or drilling for waist lining. This should be cut into the form shown by the diagram, but the elastic should not be cut until it is fitted. To get the proper dimensions put the measuring tape lengthwise, on a table, and having the diagram before you measure the length of the waist from the neck to the bottom of the bust at those places along the doubled selvage. Measure the length from the neck to the waist and the distance from the straight line from shoulder to front, keeping the same distance between them, mark the data, which must vary according to the figure of the person. If very stout they must be about two inches across at the waist line; if slender, one and a half, and a reference to the diagram will show the form. The back and side body pieces are to be measured from top to waist line.

When the lining is cut, allowing at least three inches margin below the seam, it should be basted and tried on so as to be sure the distance between them, mark the data, which must vary according to the figure of the person. If very stout they must be about two inches across at the waist line; if slender, one and a half, and a reference to the diagram will show the form. The back and side body pieces are to be measured from top to waist line. When the lining is cut, allowing at least three inches margin below the seam, it should be basted and tried on so as to be sure the distance between them, mark the data, which must vary according to the figure of the person. If very stout they must be about two inches across at the waist line; if slender, one and a half, and a reference to the diagram will show the form. The back and side body pieces are to be measured from top to waist line.

When the model wears the lining has been fitted to the figure, take it off and iron it, so that the pins will make marks and show just where the seams should go. Then the lining should be released, folding the line of the pin on the outside of them, and the pins then pulled out. Try the lining on again, right side out, when the fit is perfect the lining should be ironed again, the seams being laid flat after this, and after this the lining should be clipped so that the different pieces will fall apart without being pulled.

The lining, with an allowance for the seam of at least one inch all around, can now be given the outside material, and the lining should be clipped so that the different pieces will fall apart without being pulled. The lining, with an allowance for the seam of at least one inch all around, can now be given the outside material, and the lining should be clipped so that the different pieces will fall apart without being pulled.

When all the outlines are properly basted with all the pins more than one fourth of an inch long, turn the front over and baste as designated by the pins. A very full bust will require a Y shaped piece to front, as per diagram, is the lining only, and sometimes for quite stout ladies the front will need turning in at the top, deep neck and waist line, but the pinholes will not last how much is required for the bust.

The bust goes on the left side and the buttonholes on the right, and the top for the bust should be deep enough to have the buttonholes end in the doublet places. Leave the under pin flat and a strong piece of tape along for the bust.

When this is done, baste the darts, baste the seam from the top, tapering from an imperceptible point. The darts should never be very high, the back one being an inch higher than the front, and this about two inches below the under arm.

The seams must always be commenced from the top and carefully basted before sewing, care being taken to keep from puckering the seams. Baste the two darts first, then the side girth, beginning at the arm hole. The two middle backs should be then basted together, beginning at the top, then the side pieces, which are the most difficult of all.

If the waist now proves to fit perfectly the seams can be sewn. Iron and press the dress, but always on the outside of the busting, and the edge, as the dress is made, and the seams, and sewing them slightly makes a couple of inches difference. When they are sewn, press the waist and the busting, and the seams are bound or covered they should be pressed carefully with a hot iron before the seams are sewn on or the iron left before the bottom is finished off. If the goods are woolen, they should be basted, if not, ironed, if silk, the iron should not be too hot nor the silk moistened. The seam board should have one thickness of muslin and one of mull.

Now Try This.

It will cost you nothing and will surely do you good, if you have a Cough, Cold, or any trouble with Throat, Chest, Lungs, etc. King's Nerve Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and colds is guaranteed to give relief, or money will be paid back.

Sufferers from La Grippe found it just the thing and under its use had a speedy and perfect recovery. Try a small bottle at our expense and learn for yourself just how good a thing it is. Trial bottles free from St. Louis & Evansville Drug Store. Large bottles 50c. and $1.00.

What Farmers May Have.

If you are satisfied with a small income that will give a fair income, you may take farming, yet it will give a better yield for a small capital than any other honorable business known. Persons may not believe that statement, although it is true.

No person can name other honorable business requiring only four or five thousand dollars that will give such a yield. It is indeed an honest, remunerative and independent profession. A friend of mine has heard of a man that had been to the police to maintain his custom, although there are many times when he would have gladly killed some offending person out of the door, but on the farm a man is more independent than he can be in any other place. It is true that when selling he must have what his customers want, but he doesn't have to meet so many people as does the busy business man. He can spend a great deal more time at home with his family, and this is an important and a serious feature in the life of every individual. Some men have no time to become acquainted with their families. It is said that the child of a drummer once went to his mother crying and said, "Mamma, the man that stays here on Sundays whipped me."

The business man cuts a hurried breakfast, takes his dinner down town and gets home for supper late at night, tired and worried out with the duties of a rushing life. In the farm home a man can have nearly all that is really valuable of the city life without many of the objectionable features of the latter. Let us compare some of our farm homes with some wealthy suburban residences. The latter have fine grounds, shapely trees, extensive lawns, etc., but what the farm home cannot have the same with less expense. The latter can be just as comfortable and luxurious, though probably not so extravagant. The city house has its own beauties and railroads, but the country house can be and many are fitted with the same, although as Class. Dudley Warner says, "There's nothing so cheerful as the back log fire," and no other home can have the same comfort and inspiration from a hot fire furnace that a growing town can give. It is true that the city has luxury of gas lighting, but the farmer can manufacture his own gas if he chooses, or what is better he can light his home about as well for one-twelfth the money.

The city home has a bath room, and a farm home can and ought to have the same. It might be said that if a man would put into a farm as much money as the above mentioned, modern house would demand he couldn't sell it and get back his money. Probably not, but the fact is he does not want to sell it. Yet the standard of farming is going up, and improved farms will in the future be those most in demand. The street car is a luxury that the farmer cannot have and does not especially need, yet in the future there will be electric cars running on most roads between important cities. There are already two electric car lines running across country land in Ohio, and more are to be built. People are trying to get out of the mud, and with good roads, plenty of money and the farmer is going to do so. The farmer can have a small fruit garden, the city man cannot have. This is quite a little thing that all persons should enjoy and the farmer of the future will certainly have as he will have his vegetable garden.

Then the farmer has more breathing room. The chances for pure air and water are serious questions in cities. In the small towns they give more trouble than in the larger ones and I cannot well be controlled or prevented. The earth is close, the cement floor, the close drain and the city have other benefits than the saving of manure. It is certain that we have little to do for our sickness if we have filthy surroundings. There is a chance and ability to eat and sleep on the farm that cannot be met in the city. —T. B. Terry in Farmers' Guide.

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism in his back and legs. He had been for years affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and the sore healed.

John Specker, Cananda, O., had five large Fevers sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters cured him.

Miss Wheeler, Wilcox, has a poem on Columbus.

Miss Frances Smith tells all about Rev. D. Parkhurst, with three beautiful half-tone pictures of the eminent divine from his boyhood days to the present.

The life and works of Jenny Hunt (Mrs. Croly), by J. Martin Miller, appear in this number.

The People Their Own Rulers.

The people of the United States have two more years to go before they will elect their president and vice president.

But the people that followed that precedent have been the people that have made the United States what it is today.

In those old days questions in dispute were settled by a pitched battle; in these modern times the settlement of war has become well nigh obsolete, and national policies are decided by a ballot instead of a bayonet.

We doubt if the history of the world reveals a spectacle as inspiring as the spectacle as that presented by the American people on Tuesday last, when by an orderly revolution they met one of the political ideas to the rear and another class to the front.

The party leaders on both sides may have gone into the conflict for personal emolument or some advantage for their followers, who are carefully concealed and the words "patronage" and "persuasion," but the body of the people the rank and file—mechanic, artisan, farmer and farmer—cast their votes for the greatest good of the greatest number, because the prosperity of the whole means the prosperity of each. In other words, sixty-five million people have made themselves acquainted with the principles which underlie their government; have learned through innumerable newspapers, which fall on hill and prairie as thick as snowflakes in December, the value and effect of differing national policies, and on election day expressed an intelligent and honest opinion.

In his work on "The American Commonwealth" James Bryce puts the matter in terse and brilliant language, as follows:

"The parties are not the ultimate force in the conduct of affairs. Public opinion—that is, the mind and conscience of the whole nation—is the opinion of the persons who are included in the parties, for the parties, taken together, are the nation; and the parties, each claiming to be the true expression, seek to use it for their purpose. Yet it stands above the parties, being cooler and larger minded than they are; it awakes party leaders and holds in check party organizations. No one openly ventures to resist it. It is the product of a greater number of minds than in any other country and it is more indisputably sovereign. It is the central point in the whole American polity."

The last week corroborates this criticism in an unusually marked and conspicuous manner. Throughout the land there was no undue excitement, no passions, no passions, prevailed everywhere. The verdict was not personal to the outgoing or the incoming President. It was simply the verdict of British common sense, not passion, prevailed everywhere.

There is something specially impressive in that fact. We have a right to be proud of a people who can be implicitly trusted in the conduct of national affairs, who build a conviction out of the raw material of statistics, observation and personal experience, and whose ballot represents their power to discriminate.

There was never a more vigorous or more good natured campaign. Mr. Bryce may be in error in his estimate of the state of the American mind, but the fact is, not only of material well-being, but of intelligence and happiness, which the race has yet attained."

There is another peculiarity of recent events which is worthy of comment, namely, the willing and ready acceptance of their ill fortune by the defeated. A Republican said, "I am disappointed of course, because I think we have the right of the question, but the bulk of the people think the other way, and this is their country as well as mine." Then he quoted the poet's words of the "American dream," which runs in effect, "The opinion of a better than the opinion of any one," and that ended the matter.

What the people want, irrespective of parties, is that the government of national prosperity which will allow every merchant and every worker a share. That is the consummation devoutly to be wished, in that it gives to every citizen a share in the prosperity of the White House. Give us more business, all the land with the boom of manufacture, give everybody a chance to make a living, that is what is politics for except to calculate that result?

Sixty-five million of people pondering that problem, gathering facts with which to solve it, because it is the only conclusion and then depositing their ballots without clamor or conflict as an expression of opinion presents a picture calculated to excite a train of thought specially suited to this Day of Rest.—N. Y. Herald.

Should be kept at stables and stock-yard. It is the best feed for all kinds of stock, and of course makes well. For swelled joints, strayed lambs, old cows, mules, and all kinds of stock it is a remedy like no other. Price 25 cents per bottle.

Fashion Bits.

"Robin Red" is a new shade in tailor cloth, and is charming when combined with russet brown velvet and dull gold geometrics.

An annual wedding present to the bride the other day was a box containing ten pairs of kid gloves, but she was disappointed.

Diamonds are not detached, and get their full value. An attractive brooch was seen which had one large diamond in the center and fine waving gold rays about it.

The Eton Jacket prevails, but all kinds will be worn. The souave jacket with square front are hand brought in the new models, mixed with gold, and are quite popular.

The ordinary "gossamer" is the most unbecoming of women's garments. Knowledge, this season, pretty girls are wearing long cloaks which they have made for them, or make themselves, of the pretty waterproof goods that come in all sorts of shades, made to cover the entire gown and knitted with a long cape. The most capacious does not fault with such a storm coat.

"DONE 'EM."

WHAT IT MEANS.

Speech of Genl. A. J. Gross at the Cloverport Ratification Meeting.

As the ratification in this city last week was held on the night that we got press we could not give an accurate account of the proceedings as we wished, and while there were many things that occurred that would have made good reading matter then, they are a little too late for this issue. However, the remarks of Genl. A. J. Gross on the occasion are too good to omit.

General Gross was called from the crowd, and he had a full and complete and good feeling, mounted the rostrum and said:

FELLOW DEMOCRATS: Though almost six weeks to-night to stand up, I will say a few words. We are ratifying the greatest political victory ever achieved in this country. It is a complete triumph of the "masses over the classes," a recognition of the rights of the plain people of America. Yes, it means "equal rights to all, and exclusive privileges to none;" it means a speedy and just revision of the tariff laws of this country, which according to the Democratic definition, denies to the federal government the right to collect from the people, in the way of taxes, more money than is absolutely needed to meet the current expenses of the government, honestly and economically run; it means the strictest economy in every department of the federal government; it means no more class legislation, no Force bill; no federal supervisors and deputy marshals at the polls to interfere with the sacred rights of the people (applause). It means a free ballot and a fair count; it means that the American people may buy their supplies where they can buy for the least money; in fine, it means less of McKinleyism and more of free trade, (applause). It means better government and better times generally, more contentment, happiness and prosperity among the masses; it means Democrats in office, in place of Republicans, (applause). It means that the honest American voter cannot be bought; it means the North-west will join the South upon all economic questions, (applause); it means that we had in the contest just closed, a patriotic, courageous and magnetic leadership in Grover Cleveland and Adlai B. Stevenson, (loud cheers for Cleveland and Stevenson).

The result shows a lack of confidence in the Republican party, its principles and policies, because of its reckless extravagance, cold egotism and utter disregard of the rights of the people.

Fellow Democrats - I cannot close without referring to our greatest American citizen, a man whom we all love and delight to honor, who is probably the strongest political writer in the world, the Hon. Henry Watterson. Who as the editor of the greatest newspaper published in America, has constantly and unflinchingly advocated the rights of the masses as against the classes, and thank God, he has lived to see the principles of Tariff reform, for which he has so long, so earnestly and so ably fought triumphant at the polls, (prolonged applause).

The wind from the North blows sharp and keen, and had effects of colds are seen. One Miss Cough Cure so safe and sure, will quickly prevent a wondrous cure. Short & Haynes, Cloverport and Beard & Beeler, Harlanburg, Ky.

Give Thanks.

DISTINGUISHED GUESTS.

A Crowd of Louisville's Prominent Citizens Take in Cloverport.

The following prominent citizens of Louisville came down in a private car Monday and viewed the town and her industries:

Messes J. C. Leach, Phil. Bros., Samuel Beal, P. J. Woodbridge, Leach, Summers, John Doerflinger, J. E. Hix, G. H. Hix, Col. C. F. Johnson, W. W. Smith, Henry J. Summers, W. J. Adams, Wm. W. Evans, Fred Thomas, and Charles V. Mueller, City Engineer of Louisville; H. A. Bell, Sheriff of Jefferson county; Lela Joseph, City Attorney of Louisville; L. T. Barker, Assessor of Louisville; and W. B. Haldeman, of the Courier-Journal.

The gentlemen are nearly all interested in the Acme brick works, but visited nearly every manufacturing establishment in the city. The great Acme which has just been recently started, is running, and the distinguished visitors were greatly surprised and well pleased with its immensity and complete operation, and the praises and compliments that they heaped upon Mr. Alfred Morgan, the superintendent of the works, were both praise and love.

This plant is the largest and best equipped brick manufacturing establishment in the United States, and when it is completed, it will probably surpass any other like establishment in the entire world.

They are just now finishing their third kiln, and they will not be done building until ten or fifteen have been completed. Incomplete and imperfect as they now are, they turned out 35,000 brick in nine hours Monday.

When we get such people as the ones named above interested in Cloverport and her industries there is no doubt that they will prosper. They are wealthy men and universally known for their good and successful business qualifications, and their good property is just showing, though we think we are great now.

Our guests left for Louisville on the 6 o'clock train, and Cloverport feels proud that she has had such distinguished guests.

Our guests left for Louisville on the 6 o'clock train, and Cloverport feels proud that she has had such distinguished guests.

They are just now finishing their third kiln, and they will not be done building until ten or fifteen have been completed. Incomplete and imperfect as they now are, they turned out 35,000 brick in nine hours Monday.

When we get such people as the ones named above interested in Cloverport and her industries there is no doubt that they will prosper. They are wealthy men and universally known for their good and successful business qualifications, and their good property is just showing, though we think we are great now.

"The Unkindest Cut Of All."

While we have not "cut any acquaintances," we have made another cut in our prices for this week which cuts off all profit. This is the kind of cut that cuts to the quick. We must stand it for awhile, however. Rather than carry over the goods till next season, we cheerfully make this sacrifice. Our friends and patrons in the city and surrounding country will miss an opportunity seldom presented if they fail to take advantage of this "ugly cut."

Our new Fall and Winter stock, which are now manufacturing right here in Louisville, is fast coming in from our workmen and crowding us for room.
